

THE SAYWARD CASE.

The case came to the Supreme Court upon motion for a writ of prohibition against the Alaskan court, upon the grounds that the vessel was seized outside the jurisdiction of the court, and question of the jurisdiction of the

The government denied the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to consider the application for a writ of prohibition, but the court held that it had the jurisdiction, so the briefs on both sides were filed, and today, after some delay, the case came up for argument on its merits.

In anticipation of this case or some other of the important cases which are of special order are a large number of persons were in the Supreme Court room, among them ex-Secretary Bayard, during whose term in the State Department the Bering sea question, in its present phase, became one of the time-consuming

Mr. Calderon Carliste, the attorney for the Canadian government, opened the case in a long argument on the merits of the case.

The case being one of very great importance, considerable time will be taken up in arguments and the decision of the court is awaited with considerable interest.

One of the arguments against granting the petition of the Canadian government is that the rights an American might have under similar circumstances do not extend to a foreign vessel. If the case should be thrown out on this plea there would be no decision on the merits of the case.

It is the case of the American sealer Sydney Handy of San Francisco, which was seized seventeen miles from shore in Bering sea by the U. S. S. Bear on September 2, 1937. The vessel had on board when captured forty-two unskinned seals on deck and 1,679 skins.

The case involves the question of the jurisdiction of the United States over the waters of Bering sea, and is similar to the Sayward case except in that it is an American vessel, and that it comes up on an appeal instead
